What differentiates BI research

Broad coverage

We cover more than 135 industries and 1,900 companies across the globe, including all 10 major sectors.

Experienced analysts

We have a team of 250 experienced research professionals with senior analysts averaging 20 years of buy- and sell-side experience.

Data-driven analysis

The in-depth analysis is backed by transparent data, sourced from industry, company and 300+ third-party contributed and proprietary data sets.

No recommendations

BI analysts focus on timely fundamental trends and critical themes – they do not make investment recommendations.

Powerful research analysis

Bloomberg Intelligence research is organized into custom “dashboards” for each industry that are built around the constituent companies. On a dashboard, clients can navigate between industry, company, credit, ESG, government and litigation research.

All analysis is presented in easily digestible points supported by data and organized into scrolling research decks on a fundamental trend, theme or event. The data supporting the research is live, allowing users to interact with the data with one click on the Bloomberg Terminal®.

BI's range of research analysis includes:

Themes

Examine the thematic issues currently affecting each industry and better understand the context for longer-term issues.

Earnings

Look at the latest earnings previews and reviews for companies announcing their performance results.

Valuation

Get insights into the different valuation factors that affect an industry and compare the top performers with the underperformers.

Primers

Primers aim to give a forward-looking view into the different factors affecting an industry, company, commodity, credit or topic.

Owned vs. Shared AV's Impact

7. Autonomous Vehicle Use Should Trend Toward Shared Model Return to Top

More traffic will clog the roads if ownership of autonomous vehicles (AV's) prevails over shared ones. Industries, such as retailers, could use AVs to help create new solutions for deliveries but could also potentially boost road traffic. The response on AV's from several companies has been rapid, from BMW, Tesla to Uber and Google, which are also investing on innovation and solutions in the field.

Robust data & monitoring tool

Bloomberg Intelligence offers a powerful library of data from both proprietary and 300+ third-party sources in each of its industry dashboards. Each dashboard's Data Library houses deep content, including macro and industry factors as well as company-level operating, financial and valuation statistics.

In addition to Bloomberg data, clients have access to over 300+ third-party data sets. Accessing third-party data on an individual basis can be time-consuming and expensive. By aggregating hundreds of providers on one platform, BI data can provide tremendous value to Bloomberg clients.

Finally, BI monitoring tools provide data at the individual company level or aggregated by industry. Access real-time data and news flow, including contributed research, events, comp sheets, earnings estimates, credit analysis, ownership and more.
